Estate planning is inherently emotional, as it involves uncomfortable and difficult conversations. Thankfully, Miles Lee is prepared to guide his clients through the process. His empathetic nature and strong communication skills help him understand and address his client's needs and desires. He prioritizes understanding his client's emotional viewpoints and goals and advises with comfort and security. Miles truly cares about his clients and hopes to alleviate the stress estate planning can bring while simply describing the intricacies and complexities. His top priority is to guarantee that his clients leave with peace of mind after working with him.

Miles graduated from the University of Kentucky with a bachelor's degree in accounting and earned his J.D. from the University of Louisville Brandeis School of Law. After law school, Miles worked as an associate trust counsel for one of Kentucky's largest state-chartered trust companies. This experience gave him valuable insights into trust administration, influencing his estate planning practice. Afterward, he was employed by Clayton R. Hume, PLLC, where he managed various tasks, such as drafting estate planning documents, setting up various types of trusts, administering trusts, collaborating with individual and corporate trustees, handling estate administration, and conducting tax planning.

When not in the office, Miles enjoys exercising, spending time outdoors, playing golf, and supporting University of Kentucky athletics.
